

John Wright is an inspiring young leader in the community born the Lowcountry area of South Carolina. Embracing his Gullah roots, his passion for politics began at a young age, as he started volunteering with the South Carolina Democratic Party at the age of 16. He was part of the first graduating class of the James E. Clyburn Political Fellowship, which gave him valuable experience and insight into the world of politics.

John's commitment to his community and his dedication to making a difference continued to grow. He graduated from the Congressional Black Caucus Institute, which helped him develop his leadership skills and broaden his understanding of the political landscape.

Throughout his career, John has held a variety of roles that have allowed him to make an impact. He served as campaign manager for SCDP 2nd Vice Chair Anthony Thompson, where he helped develop strategies to reach and motivate voters. During the 2020 election, John travelled all 46 counties advocating for the Democratic candidates. Recently, he served on the leadership team for Congressman James. E. Clyburn campaign team, which he played a crucial part in developing and executing strategies that resulted in success. Currently, John serves as Chief of Staff to the Executive Committee of the Young Democrats of South Carolina, where he helps to mobilize and organize young people to get involved in politics and make a difference in their communities. He knows the importance of educating the Youth on how the State party and Government work.

John's passion for politics and his commitment to making a difference have driven him to become a respected leader in his community. He continues to work tirelessly to build a better future for the people of South Carolina and beyond.
